Jupiter, the fifth planet from the sun, is the largest planet in the solar system. It is the first of the “gas giants” and has no surface, though it may have a rocky core. Although its only 1/1000th as massive as the sun, its more then double as massive as all of the other planets in the solar system combined. Jupiters atmisphere is seperated into diferent bands and gives the planet the appearance of haveing whitish and reddish layers with various spots swirls and bubbles. Jupiter’s most noteable feature, other then it’s size, is the grate red spot, a football shaped area of intense storms.
